

The Sarojin celebrates Songkran with host of experiential activities for guests

20 March 2018 - The Sarojin, Thailand's luxurious 56-roomed boutique residence, is helping guests experience Thailand's ancient water festival of Songkran, celebrating the Thai New Year, (13-15 April), with a range of special activities and a pool-side gourmet BBQ. To mark the holiday, the luxury resort in secluded Khao Lak will invite guests to join in with cultural traditions, religious blessings and festivities, making The Sarojin the perfect place to see in the Thai New Year.

On the morning of the 12th April, the local Buddhist monks will visit the resort to give spiritual blessings and collect traditional alms; with guests invited to participate in the very special ceremony, it is sure to be a memorable event for all. Following this, guests will be treated to traditional Thai music and dance, along with Thai desserts and natural art; including building Sand Pagodas, or "Phra Chedi Sai", offering guests an authentic Songkran experience.

Songkran wouldn't be complete without water celebrations, which will include 'Bathing the Buddha' rituals and playful water fights around The Sarojin's beautiful pool. To end the spectacular day, the resort will be holding a very special gourmet BBQ in its lush tropical gardens. With traditional dishes from across the country, including papaya salad from the north east, pork curry with ginger and pickled garlic from central Thailand and sumptuous seafood from the south, it is the perfect opportunity to try the country's delicious cuisine.

To really enhance their cultural experiences, guests can embark on one of The Sarojin's community conscious experiences, including a Glimpse of Local Life (THB 3,200, approx. £70pp), Street Food Cook for Kids Initiative (THB 5,900, £130pp) and the Phang Nga Temple Tour (THB 5,500, approx. £120pp).
